Campus Arboretum

The Campus Arboretum is a living laboratory. As we grow so too has our comprehensive collection of resources supporting community education and scientific research. To this end, undergraduate student interns at the Campus Arboretum have dedicated much of the last year to an ongoing photo project that will ultimately provide descriptive photographic illustration of each of the plant species on campus. Their dedication is paying off and resulted in the addition of hundreds of new photos representing 60 plant species in recent months. The photographs can be found in species description pages on the Campus Arboretum's website. The photos will be accompanied by written descriptions. Combined, these serve as resources for plant identification and publicly promote the availability of the plant collection to scientists worldwide. Images capture characteristics like leaf shape, bark texture, flower, fruit and habit.
